} Dear friend, Today marks one year since the attack on the U.S. Capitol, so I wanted to share some thoughts with you about what this solemn anniversary means to me. Asked about the future of American democracy, Madeleine Albright called herself "an optimist who worries a lot." I feel the same way.Our shared outlook is likely shaped by our similar personal stories.She was born in Czechoslovakia before World War II. Her family fled Nazism, then communism, and was given sanctuary in the United States. She rose to become the first female Secretary of State.I was born in Vietnam after the Vietnam War. My family fled communism, was rescued by the U.S. Navy, and was given sanctuary in America. I became the first Vietnamese-American woman elected to Congress.I love America - and deplore those who threaten her security or violate her values. It doesn't matter to me if the threat is external or internal, or comes from the extreme right or the extreme left. Dear friend, Today marks one year since the attack on the U.S. Capitol, so I wanted to share some thoughts with you about what this solemn anniversary means to me. Asked about the future of American democracy, Madeleine Albright called herself "an optimist who worries a lot." I feel the same way. Our shared outlook is likely shaped by our similar personal stories. She was born in Czechoslovakia before World War those who threaten her security or violate her values. It doesn't matter to me if the threat is external or internal, or comes from the extreme right or the extreme left. Such patriotism is common among refugees. Having received America's grace and generosity, we feel duty-bound to defend the nation that came to our rescue. We understand America may sometimes fall short of its ideals, but we never take America for granted. We believe democracy - and democratic capitalism - are the best ways to promote security, justice and prosperity. We know what the alternatives look like, because our own families endured them until they escaped them. As immigrants who've seen their native countries disfigured by dictatorship, we also recognize there is nothing inevitable about the success or survival of American democracy. It must be preserved and protected by patriots of all political stripes, generation after generation. In recent years, Albright has warned that our democracy is endangered from within. The events of Jan. 6, 2021, proved her prophetic.
