Getting kids back to school As August approaches, parents and children would normally be preparing for the start of a new academic year. Now, states and localities around the nation are carefully considering the benefits and risks of sending children back to school. As we look to continue safely and smartly reopening our country, we have to look at the holistic health of the country — physically, socially, and intellectually. Safely reopening the economy and getting life back to a level of normalcy is going to require good medical decisions at the local level that take into consideration each communities' individual needs. We need to build parents' confidence that we can take precautions and send our kids to school in a safe and secure way. I'd like to know your thoughts regarding children going back to school. Do you support sending children back to school in Fall 2020 if proper safety precautions and procedures are in place in communities and at schools?
