style="font-size: 24pt;">Protecting Consumer Choice for Home Appliances  In 1975, Congress established the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (EPCA) to increase American energy production, encourage efficient energy use, and bolster national energy security. Under the EPCA, the Department of Energy (DOE) sets efficiency standards for 60 product categories – but these standards must be cost-effective, significantly save energy, and be technologically feasible.
 Unfortunately, the DOE's proposed standards aim to shut down the use of natural gas, regardless of cost, performance, or availability. Making the switch to fully electric appliances is simply not feasible for all Wisconsin families. In fact, about <a style="color: #1b5378;"

for appliances that are not technologically feasible or economically justified.
