Just this past weekend, neo-Nazi groups declared February 25th a "National Day of Hate", calling on their followers to vandalize and spread their propaganda. It's abundantly clear that antisemitism is on the rise globally, especially if you've logged onto Twitter recently.

At a House Oversight Committee hearing with Twitter executives last month, I pointed out that there has been a 61% increase in antisemitic hate speech on the app since November 2022. I demanded answers as to why this hatred was exploding on Twitter. After doing so, my personal and official accounts were flooded with hundreds of antisemitic replies...proving my point that Twitter has become a hate-filled playground for Nazis and antisemites.

With this direct and heightened environment in mind, I wrote a letter to Twitter CEO Elon Musk asking how he would work with stakeholders to combat the rise of antisemitism on Twitter.

But Congress's work in combatting antisemitism doesn't stop there. I was also proud to recently sign onto the HEAL Act, bipartisan legislation conducting a study on Holocaust education efforts in public schools nationwide.

I'm also humbled to serve on the House Foreign Affairs Committee, where I intend to be a fierce advocate for the US-Israel relationship and push back against the demonization of our ally.

This is all to say that antisemitism is still prevalent and, unfortunately, a top focus of my concern in Congress. Until Jewish Americans can live without fear of threat, our work is not done.
